THE LEADING PUBLICATION FOR COMMERCIAL, INTERACTIVE, & BRANDED CONTENT PRODUCTION

$5.00

AUGUST 18-SEPT, 7,2006

- WestWayne's PSA Strategy: Vote Or Consequences
- Director David Priezler Signs With Serial Dreamer
- Marco Perez Moves Stateside, Joins Mad River
- Hunsberger Elected President Of AICE/Los Angéles

ScreenWork

- Top Spot: Adrian de sa Garces Gets Kicks On TV
- Brandstand: DDB Creates Back-To-School TV Special
- Best Work: Director Paul Gay Captures A Sense Of Loss
- Best Work: Jaffe Serves Formaldehyde Cocktail

Agency Heads Of Production

11 Heads of production assume lead roles in helping to shape and define their agencies' future. How and why the producer skill set has become such a coveted commodity in the brave new media world.

Music & Sound

a cross-section of the spot nusic industry reflects on audio identities, original composition, licensing and competitive demos. Plus the Summer Top 10 Spot Tracks Chart, and a look at the creative genesis of Tracks numper one and two.

Agency Initiatives For Vendor Diversity Start To Take Shape

Demand Is Increasing for Qualified Minority And Woman-Owned Prodn. Cos.; Search Also Encompasses Edit/Post, Other Sectors

By Robert Goldrich

AUSTIN, Texas-Vendor diversity initiatives at ad agencies are beginning to pick up positive momentum, with shops such as GSD&M, Austin, Texas, actively seeking and in some cases hiring qualified minority and/or woman-owned production houses for select projects.

One of the architects of the GSD&M program is Anita Laney, who served as that agency's staff director of vendor program diversity for threeand-a-half years before opening in November 2005 her own Austin-based independent venture. Professional Partnering Solutions, which specializes in vendor diversity consultation to companies in different sectors, including the advertising industry. Among Professional Partnering Solutions' clients are BBDO Detroit and GSD&M.

Based on the inquiries she's received, Laney expects an increasing number of agencies to proactively pursue vendor diversity in the months ahead. Further underscoring this movement is last month's Omnicom Diversity Summit at DDB New York, during which Laney made a wide-ranging presentation on the subject, addressing such areas as what clients look for and best practices.

"A big push in the advertising community for supplier diversity is developing," related Laney, who noted that in some respects the GSD&M approach could become, and in some instances is serving as, a template for other agencies.

A GSD&M outreach program to find out about minority and/or woman-owned production houses generated "an overwhelming response" from reps and companies, related Laney. Greg Lane, senior VP, director of media production at GSD&M, noted that as part of the creative/production department outreach, agency staffers attended industry confabs

Continued on page 6

IBC Preview: Hot Topics. Technologies

By Carolyn Glardina

AMSTERDAM-In a few short weeks the annual International Broadcasting Convention (IBC) will begin in Amsterdam, focusing on content creation, management and delivery-while highlighting such seminal topics as the HD transition, mobile content delivery and digital cinema. This subject matter will be addressed in the conferences, on the exhibition floor and in the digital cinema screening theater.

In commercialmaking, specific areas to watch are the continued industry shift toward softwarebased nonlinear color correction

Continued on page 3

Continued on page 5

Aardman Set To Receive IBC Honor

By Carolyn Giardina

AMSTERDAM-The 2006 IBC International Honor For Excellence will be bestowed on four-time Oscar winning Aardman Animations, a leading character animation studio for features, television, commercials, music videos and shorts. The Bristol, UK-based shop is perhaps best know for its beloved Wallace and Gromit characters, which are the subjects of two Academy Award winning shorts (A Close Shave and The Wrong Trousers)

Two Team For Kangaroo Project

By Robert Goldrich

MINNEAPOLIS-Mark Setterholm, executive producer of Minneapolis-based production house Drive Thru, and John Benson, a freelance writer in Kansas City, Mo., have teamed on the winning concept for the fifth annual Kangaroo Project competition: Sponsored by the nonprofit Sean Francis Foundation in order to mentor promising creative and filmmaking talent via the production of worthwhile public service ad work that is guaranteed airtime. the Kangaroo Project this time around is a PSA that promotes prevention of domestic violence.

Setterholm and Benson's concept topped assorted entries in judging by a panel of advertising and production professionals. The two entrants' PSA centers on the song "Hell No," representing that defiining moment when a person decides he or she is not going to take it anymore. Plans call for the PSA cast to consist of people who have had that experience relative to the subject matter. The spot will reflect the fact that once people make the personal decision to change their lives, they then find out how they aren't alone and that support is available. The concept won with the proviso that Setterholm and Benson can secure the rights to "Hell No" (from the musical The Color Purple). Word is that prospects for gaining those rights look good.

Continued on page 7

Continued from page I

The Francis Foundation and Kangaroo have recruited Bloomington, Minn.-headquartered Cornerstone as a partner this year. Cornerstone is a nonprofit organization founded in 1983 to prevent violence and to provide comprehensive services to victims of domestic abuse and their children. These services include a 24-hour helpline. supportive housing, an emergency shelter, individual advocacy and life skills training.

As in years past, the Kangaroo Project consists of two competitions. First, the concept competition, which was won by Setterholm and Benson. The second leg of the Kangaroo contest is selecting a director for the PSA. At press time, the deadline had just passed for prospective directors (with or without experience) to submit their treatments for the winning concept, conveying their vision of the spot. A panel of ad agency creative directors and producers will judge the treatments, with the winning director and treatment to be announced later this month. Pre-pro, production and post will then take place. primarily in September and into October. The final PSA is slat> ed to premiere at the Minnesota Advertising Federation's "The Show" in October. The PSA will then gain airtime via the partnership with Cornerstone.

The actual production itself is designed to help foster the development of aspiring crew people.

Past Kangaroo Project PSAs have tackled such issues as organ donation, AIDS awareness, motorcycle safety, and safe and courteous driving. Each year the Kangaroo Project recruits apprentices, called Joevs, to be mentored by experienced crewmembers during the making of the selected commercial. Just as new directorial talent is encouraged to submit treatments, the actual production itself is designed to help foster the development of aspiring crew people.

Film producer Julie Hartley teamed with several members of Minnesota's production > community-including Kirk Hokanson, owner/ president of Voodoo Films, Minneapolis-to form the Sean Francis Foundation, named after her 20-year-old son who died in a motorcycle accident in 2000. From the Foundation sprung the Kangaroo Project and the decision to create a motorcycle safety PSA in the competition's inaugural year of '02. The Kangaroo Project was initiated to make an ongoing filmmaking mark in Francis' memory. In that he was a top flight P.A. who aspired to become a producer. a key Kangaroo component is to help to nurture and open up new opportunities for deserving creatives, directors and crew members-in some cases, helping them to start their careers.

The Kangaroo moniker grew out of the way the animal carries and nurtures young marsupials in her pouch. The apprenticeships parallel this in that experienced crew will help Joeys take a hop forward in their careers. The Kangaroo designation was also chosen in that Francis was born in Australia.

